The most significant difference between Prince's and Le landlords' views is the inclusion of Passamoreddy's text on the preceding page.

The landlord and prince representations of Passamoreddy were produced in a broad style, characterized by vivid, detailed descriptions of the characters and their interactions. The text is written in a formal, literary style, with frequent references to the natural world and the rural setting.

This style of writing reflects the romantic ideals of the period and the emphasis on the individual's relationship with the land. The landlord is portrayed as a benevolent figure, while the prince is depicted as a more distant and ideologically distant figure. The text also contains several references to the power of the land and its ability to sustain life.

Overall, the document provides a rich and detailed glimpse into the social and political environment of the time, and the ways in which different groups of people made sense of their world.
